

1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19
20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA
SAN FRANCISCO DIVISION

ANGEL FRALEY, et al.

No. C 11-1726 RS

Plaintiffs,

v.

FACEBOOK, INC.,

Defendant.

ORDER DENYING MOTION FOR POSTING OF APPEAL BONDS

Plaintiffs seek an order requiring each objector, or group of objectors, who has filed an appeal in this action to post a bond pursuant to Rule 7 of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure. That rule provides, in relevant part, “[i]n a civil case, the district court may require an appellant to file a bond or provide other security in any form and amount necessary to ensure payment of costs on appeal.” Plaintiffs request that each bond be posted in the amount of $32,000, roughly representing (1) an estimated $1500 plaintiffs will incur in copying costs in the event they find it necessary to supplement the excerpts of record the objectors submit, and (2) an additional $30,450 in estimated “costs of continued settlement administration during the length of the appeal period.” Pursuant to Civil Local Rule 7-1(b), the plaintiffs’ motion has been submitted without oral argument. It will be denied.

As reflected in the language of the rule, its purpose is to “protect[] . . . an appellee against the risk of nonpayment by an unsuccessful appellant.” In re AOL Time Warner, Inc., 2007 WL

1 2741033, *2 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 20, 2007); see also Page v. A.H. Robins Co., 85 F.R.D. 139, 139-40
2 (E.D.Va. 1980) (“[T]he purpose[] of an appeal bond is to provide an appellee security for the
3 payment of such costs as may be awarded to him in the event that the appellant is unsuccessful in
4 his appeal.”). The advisory committee notes to Rule 7 indicate that the question of the need for a
5 bond, as well as its amount, are left to the discretion of the trial court. See Fed. R.App. 7, 1979
6 advisory committee notes. None of the parties dispute that this Court is vested with such discretion.

7 Rule 7 does not provide explicit guidance as to what factors a court should take into account
8 in determining whether to require a bond, but courts have considered matters including (1) the
9 appellant’s financial ability to post a bond; (2) the risk that the appellant would not pay the 10 appellee’s costs if the appeal loses; and, (3) the merits of the appeal. See Fleury v. Richemont North
11 America, Inc., 2008 WL 4680033, *6 (N.D.Cal. 2008) and cases cited therein. Here, the most
12 significant dispute is whether it is proper to require a bond for “administrative costs” of the nature
13 plaintiffs are seeking in the $30,450 amount.

14 In Azizian v. Federated Department Stores, Inc., 499 F.3d 950 (9th Cir. 2007), the Ninth
15 Circuit noted that Rule 7 does not define “costs on appeal.” Id. at 958. Azizian rejected the position,
16 adopted by some courts, that the term is synonymous with the “costs” listed in Rule 39 as
17 recoverable by a party prevailing on appeal. Id. at 956. Instead, the court concluded, for purposes
18 of Rule 7 the term “costs on appeal” also “includes all expenses defined as ‘costs’ by an applicable
19 fee-shifting statute, including attorney’s fees.” Id. at 958. The objectors point to Azizian to argue
20 that because administrative costs are neither recoverable under Rule 39 nor defined as costs in 21 another statute, they are not properly included in any bond. Plaintiffs, in turn, insist that because
22 the only issue decided in Azizian was the propriety of including attorney fees in a bond, it simply
23 has no applicability here.

24 Plaintiffs are correct that Azizian does not expressly address “administrative costs” such as 25 those they are claiming here. The point, however, is that Azizian demonstrates items included in 26 bond amounts under Rule 7 must be authorized by some rule or statutory provision—if an item does
27 not appear as a recoverable cost in Rule 39, then the party seeking to include it in a bond amount
28 must show some other basis for treating it as such.

1 More fundamentally, the question is not whether an item represents a “cost” an appellee
2 may incur during an appeal, but whether such “cost” is one that a losing appellant will become
3 responsible for paying to the appellee. Indeed, in Azizian the court held inclusion of fees in a bond
4 amount to be improper—notwithstanding the existence of a fee-shifting statute—because the
5 appellant would not have been liable for those fees even if he lost, given that the fee-shifting statute
6 was “asymmetrical.” Id. at 959-60. Here, plaintiffs have pointed to no rule or statute that would
7 render objectors liable for the “administrative costs” even assuming their appeals fail. Accordingly,
8 there is no basis to require objectors to post a bond for those costs.

9 As noted, plaintiffs also estimate that they may incur up to approximately $1500 in copying
10 costs in the event they deem it necessary to supplement the excerpts of record that the objectors
11 submit on appeal. There is no dispute such costs, if incurred and otherwise appropriate, would fall
12 within the ambit of Rule 39 and therefore be the proper subject of a bond under Rule 7. Under the 13 circumstances here, however, plaintiffs have not made a sufficient showing that there is a risk
14 recoverable costs will be incurred which they will be unable to collect, absent the posting of a bond
15 or bonds by the objectors. Were a greater sum at stake, or if there were a basis to infer that
16 objectors were likely to ignore or evade their obligations to comply with any cost award, or lack the 17 resources to comply, the result might be different. On this record, however, discretion weighs
18 against imposing any requirement that a bond be posted. Accordingly, the motion is denied.

19

20

IT IS SO ORDERED.

21

22

Dated: 6/27/14

23

24

25

26

27

28

23
RICHARD SEEBORG
UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE